A note from Class 3...

Class 3 have had a busy few weeks as always. In English, we have thoroughly enjoyed our inventions theme. At the end of last half term, we based our non-fiction writing on one of Wallace and Gromit's crazy contraptions-the snowmanatron. This half term, we have focused on fiction, using a short film, 'The girl and the robot' as our inspiration. The results for both writing types have been incredible. In Maths, we have finished our lengthy fractions topic and are now moving onto decimals.

Last half term also saw our first in -person meeting with our link school at Burnley Youth Theatre. It was a really uplifting experience and we all thoroughly enjoyed it. We have exchanged letters and we can't wait to meet up again in the Summer Term.

In the afternoons, we have loved experimenting with changes of states in science as well as creating our own water cycles. We have created different styles of switches in DT in order to design our own torches. The sports councillors have been super busy designing football challenge week which has proved to be very successful. Furthermore, we have explored creating our own 3D models using tinkercad in computing.

What?

Scientists have discovered a rare case of vitrification (which is where organic material turns to glass) inside the skull of a Vesuvius eruption victim from 79 AD.

The remains, found in Herculaneum, belonged to a 20-year-old man who was engulfed by an ash cloud reaching 510°C. The extreme heat, followed by rapid cooling, preserved parts of his brain as black, glass-like fragments - the only known case of its kind.

What?

Initially, researchers thought the fragments were fossilised brain tissue, but X-ray and electron microscopy analysis confirmed they had undergone vitrification and turned into glass.

Experts believe the intense ash cloud caused instant death, followed by a huge lava flow that buried the city.

This discovery provides rare insights into the catastrophic impact of volcanic eruptions and the extreme conditions needed for organic matter to turn into glass.
